

Clark's crabapples are on the larger side for crabapples, often reaching around 2 inches in diameter or slightly more, making them excellent "lunchbox" size for eating fresh, though sizes can vary, sometimes being described as egg-sized or perfect for kids. They are known for being meaty and good for fresh eating, unlike many other crabapples that are tiny or too tart. ↗

Key characteristics:

- Size: Around 2 inches or slightly larger.
- Type: A red-fleshed variety, notes Steveb4 on growingfruit.org.
- Use: Great for eating fresh, unlike many smaller, tarter crabapples.